

Cape Argus

12

MONDAY JUNE 13 2011

● SAAF, scramble the Gripen and shoot down that flipping advertising plane. Now. Please.

● SA Idols judges are rude and disgusting in the manner in which they destroy the hopes and aspirations of the young competitors. They would do well to follow the American show's judges' example in how to say "no". – Alan

● Keep it up, M-Net. Idols is awesome. And Unathi is so hot.

● Gareth Cliff said that if you have not made it as a singer by the time you are 28, you should give up. I'm glad he was not a judge on Britain's Got Talent or he would have overlooked Susan Boyle. See how far she has come? Don't judge a book by its cover.

● If there are those of us in the business of pulling down, shouldn't we then be pulling down that which hinders us from doing the business of building up?

● Tattoos are a personal preference yet very visible most times. Why is it, then, that people with tattoos, even tiny ones, look common and totally unsophisticated?

12

TUESDAY JUNE 14 2011

word "tariffs". (Editor: Apologies for the gobbledeygook. The error was introduced in the subbing process, but was corrected in our Late Final edition.)

● Thank you, ojljh, for the amusing headline. Now can I get a partial refund on my subscription?

Others

● In response to shooting down the advertising plane: ads drive spending, which drives investment – investments create jobs. After hearing today's repeated increase in unemployment by 1 percent, I say fly plane, fly!

● The ad plane is clearly working: people are noticing and talking about it! Guess there ain't no such thing as bad publicity!

● Thank you to Sylvester Mampi from Telkom for going the extra mile

● I don't like tattoos but if people want them that's their business. My son has one on his lower back and my daughter has a tiny one on her ankle and neither